

Undoubtedly the most famous resident ever at the San Diego Zoo, Albert was a handsome silver-backed lowland gorilla. Albert, born in Africa, arrived at the Zoo in August of 1949 at about four months of age. He and two baby female lowland gorillas were hand raised at the Zoo hospital. As Albert reached maturity he was moved to the then new open air gorilla grotto located where this restaurant now stands.

In 1965 he fathered Alvila, the first lowland gorilla conceived and born at the San Diego Zoo, and only the seventh gorilla born in captivity. During his years here, Albert endeared himself to an international audience through his majestic stature, his mischievous behavior and his gentle demeanor.

Albert died peacefully on October 18, 1978, however his spirit continues through the conservation efforts of the San Diego Zoo, the ambiance of his namesake restaurant, and in his grandchildren living at the San Diego Zoo and Wild Animal Park.
